Tutor Center offers academic counseling

Students struggling through subjects such as math, chemistry, biology and physics, while at the same time struggling to balance their check books, can find help at the Utah State University Tutor Center.

The center provides on site tutors free of charge for students who require help with any subject they require. If the tutor's scheduled times do not coincide with the students, other help will be provided. However, if a student wishes to have an individual private tutor, there is a charge since these tutors are not paid by the university.

The tutors hired for the center must meet certain qualifications. According to Mel Larson, associate director of academic services, "They must have a 3.5 grade point average in the subject being taught, and they must be able to relate well with people."

Many of the tutors, according to Larson, are hired through the USU work study program. The tutors are also interviewed by Larson and Lavell Saunders, director of academic services, before being hired.

Larson said the tutor program, which is in its second year, is growing so rapidly that expansion of the center can be seen in the future. "Last quarter 700 hours of tutoring went on, and 300 students were tutored," he said.

The center not only provides tutoring but also academic counseling. Counselors are on hand to advise students of graduation requirements and deadlines, academic probation or any academic question or problem. The Tutor Center is located in Old Main Room 102. Larson encourages students to visit the center whether it be for tutoring, counseling, or just to sit and relax.

Convocations reviewed

A proposal to have the Convocations Series listed as a general education course was brought before the Executive Council Wednesday.

If the resolution, submitted by Kathy Payne, family life senator, and Dave Bagley, academic vice president, passes, the Convocations Series will be a one-credit course. An hour class will be held in addition to the weekly lecture. During this hour students will be required to "synthesize, discuss and exchange ideas of Convocation presentations" under the supervision of a faculty member.

The Executive Council may also be expected to select the Election Chairperson by Nov. 15 each year, according to a bill submitted by Student Relations Vice President Gary Arnett.

After the elections each year, the outgoing Executive Council and Election Committee will review the election process and file a written evaluation of the process with the ASUSU president and the director of activities. The new Election Chairperson is to review the election's complaints and suggestions, then recommend changes of the bylaws which are to improve the entire system. The election bylaws will then need to be approved by Jan. 15 by the Executive Council.

The Executive Council approved a letter-writing campaign enabling students to voice their opinions to Congress about the cut in federal student aids.

The Council on Women's Issues and Concerns, with Jackie Morrison as president, will provide a table on the first floor of the Taggart Student Center.

USU stationery, envelopes and stamps will be provided for the letters. A caravan will pick up the letters, then "literally dump them on Congress," said Morrison.
